this was on seven and fifteen and thirty-day billis; but no one could point out any instance where a long loan had been negotiated at less than five per cent. He (Mr. M.) would also prefer to pay six per cent. At home to five per cent. abroad. He thought the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Scott) was unnecessarily alarmed at the employment of agencies. The house of Jay Cooke & Co. had performed a great service to the country in disposing of the former loans at the prices. He would now be willing to pay five per cent. to place the four per cent. insert on the market. But he maintained that we cannot negotiate a loan at less than five per cent. and fill, our results will be thereby dependant of the first per cent. loan of fall, our results will be thereby dependent. chiefed. Mr. Williams opposed the amendment. He had more condinence in the Sucretary of the Treasury than in any one cles, and the Secretary was confident of being able to negotiable as a and 45 per cent, as now provided in the bill. He believed that there was growing lo-day in the money markets of the world a greater condience in the resources and ability of the United States of America than in any country number heaven. He believed that we could get money at 3½ per cent, and he was in favor of allowing the Secretary of the Treatury to make the effort. These 4½ per cent, bonds, which were free from every species of taxation, would enter into competition with the 6 per cent, bonds, which are subject to all species of taxation. He admitted that this was an experiment, but if Congress refeach to allow the Secretary to try is, it would be placing the Government in an awkward stitled.

Mr. Morrill, of Vt., said some of the best securities in this country were offered to day at it per secul, free of taxation, and homes it was utter fully to take a loan at 4½ per cent.

Mr. Cameron thought gold would be at par in a very few months, and he should move an amendment competing the Secretary to redeem all the fractional currency on the first of July.

Mr. Corbett eberacterized the fifth section as in effect getting on our knees to foreign Governments and akking them to take our loan.

The motion of Mr. Corbett to strike out the fifth section entire was then adopted—year 39, nays 11.

Mr. Howe withdraw his amendment.
Mr. Cookling characterized the eighth section of the bill, relating to the national banks, as unmistakable repudiation.

Mr. Longhridge, of lows, asked leave to offer an ammoniment receiving to Congress the right to amend, alter or change the hill as any time.

Mr. Logue, of Ill., asked why the objection was made. Bills of this kind generally had a provision of that kind.

Mr. Logersoil said because there were too many ventrictions in the bill, and the company would not accept the franchise if the bill was label to change by Congress. The next Congress might be minical to this bill, and there were tuck impediments in the way as to make the charter worthless.

Mr. Logan said if that amendment was not inserted the company would control the whole majer, and not be subject to my authority.

Mr. Wood, of N. Y., declared that he could get up a company in New York, who would offer twerty million dollars for this franchise.

Mr. Logan said if the billswel the corporation would est out for five million dollars.

Mr. Cox, of New York, made the point of order that it was not in order to put this franchise up at anotion here and sell it out to the highest bidder. Laughter,
